

Invitation to:

Gold Miners, Responsible Mining and Climate Change

Dear Commodity Club Members & Experts,

We are delighted to extend an exclusive invitation to an online event organized and hosted by London-based company NTree.

'Gold Miners, Responsible Mining, and Climate Change'
28th September, 11:00 CEST, online event

Today's world market volatility highlights the necessity for European investors to consider adding Commodities to their portfolios. With a focus on the Chinese and Commodities markets, which the company believes are intertwined, given the growing importance of innovation in AI, renewable energy and electric vehicles, to name but a few, NTree aims to educate its network of asset allocators, asset managers and fund managers on investment opportunities in both markets.

This week, NTree CEO Tim Harvey will be hosting a 60-min talk with John Mulligan, World Gold Council Climate Change Lead and Market Relations Director, on issues relating to responsible mining and the actions being taken by gold mining companies to mitigate climate change.

They will address many questions:

1. What are the current areas of focus in responsible mining and what should investors expect in terms of 'wins'?
2. Are there any mining companies that really stand out in terms of their actions, or that are the pace setters in terms of others wanting to emulate?
3. On climate change, what are the areas of most concern to investors, are there any regional differences?
4. Where do you see the industry making the most progress in mitigating climate change in the next five years?
5. An overview of how different climate scenarios might affect gold's performance
